ELUSIVE ESCAPE
This unit may re-roll any Retreat Distance Dice. Enemies this unit disengages from may not pivot and become Weakened.

BLOODY MUMMER SKIRMISHERS

Despite their outrageous appearance, the Bloody Mummurs remain a deadly band of mercenaries, noted for their cruelty, itself excessive for even low-brow mercenaries. They're loyal to coin alone, but meet their price and their ranks will fill whatever role an army requires. The Skirmishers are lightly armed and armored, granting them the mobility needed for rapid flanking, though they should be protected from direct charges.

BLOODY MUMMER ZORSE RIDERS

Never lacking for outrageous flair, Bloody Mummer cavalry ride Zorses into battle. These unusual beasts originate from Essos, where striped animals and horses were interbred to create the species. Zorses can survive on little food and water for extended periods, but remain as swift as their western counterparts. Zorse Riders fill a classic light cavalry role in the Mummer ranks, flanking and charging pinned units and exposed archers.

The Golden Company, the Free Cities' most reliable mercenary group, offers several types of troops for hire. One being their Crossbowmen. These sharp-eyed fighters never waste a shot, resolutely waiting until enemies have closed to within perfect range before unleashing their bolts. These bolts punch through enemy armor with ease, especially at closer ranges. Anyone looking to bolster their forces can get a bargain by hiring them.

GOLDEN COMPANY SWORDSMEN

7

The Golden Company is well known for their motto, "Our word is good as gold." When hired on to fight, they make sure to give every penny's worth on the battlefield. Their Swordsmen have trained relentlessly, letting them find any weak spot in an enemy's defenses, exploiting it. Meanwhile, they almost never flee the field, even when faced with seemingly insurmountable odds, making them a sound investment for anyone with the coffers to afford them.

GOLDEN COMPANY WAR ELEPHANT

Even the best-trained soldier will likely have no idea what to do when a massive elephant bears down on their battle line. The brutish War Elephants of the Golden Company stomp their way into enemy lines, seemingly impervious to attack, while they use their massive feet and tusks to demolish foes. However, they are simple creatures and without a handler nearby, it's possible they'll stop acting entirely, unsure about what action they should be taking.

HEDGE KNIGHTS

HEDGE KNIGHTS

So-called Hedge Knights travel the world in search of employment. Owning little but their arms, armor, and their horse, these landless nobles are shunned and disdained—except in times of war. With their blades for hire, and supplying their own equipment, nobles from all sides of the War of Five Kings can find a use for a half dozen or so trained knights on the battlefield. That said, their equipment rarely matches that of true knights.

HOUSE BOLTON BASTARD'S GIRLS

7

Trained to corner and bring down even heavy infantry, the Bastard's Girls are best utilized as flankers or in pursuit of fleeing foes. While they do not possess the armor to counter a determined assault, enemies suffering from their handlers' wounding arrows make for easy prey. A fat bounty can be expected for handlers bringing down enemy commanders to await Ramsay Bolton's 'entertainments' following battle.

HOUSE BOLTON BLACKGUARDS

6

The ruthlessness of House Bolton's Blackguards is known by every enemy force they face. Their vicious spiked flails render heavy shields only moderately effective. Being the heaviest troops in House Bolton's arsenal, the Blackguards can be relied upon to take and hold any position on the battlefield.

INTIMIDATING PRESENCE

Enemies engaged with this unit suffer -1 to Morale Test rolls and +1 Wound from failing Panic Tests.

HOUSE BOLTON CUTTHROATS

5

While simply armored and lightly armed, Bolton Cutthroats enjoy a reputation for brutality and cold efficiency that allows them to strike panic in enemies with far more expensive armaments. Their spiked maces can easily dispatch enemies, but are more effective for the fear their brutality creates. Bolton Cutthroats make sport of downed foes or, worse for the opponent, take them prisoner to suffer a much more agonizing fate.

HOUSE BOLTON FLAYED MEN

8

The so-called Flayed Men rank among the heaviest cavalry employed by even the largest houses in the War of the Five Kings. With thick steel armor (blackened, of course), heavy shields, and even protective barding for the horses, the Flayed Men are capable of truly devastating charges and can endure in the line for a short time. Their signature war flails render most defenses only marginal at best, but their terrifying visage remains their most vital weapon.

LYSENE SELLSWORDS

The island fortresses of Lys have high, thick walls and plenty of Sellswords patrolling their coast to make them an unappealing target for attack. However, these Sellswords are just that, offering their services to anyone with coffers deep enough to hire them abroad. Not interested in individual glory, they're only focused on grabbing plunder and the payment waiting for them when they head back to their home port.

STORMCROW ARCHERS

A Stormcrow is a Stormcrow, whether wielding blade, bow, or both. Money remains the prime motivator in the Stormcrow mind, and extra coin can prod added effort from these mercenaries. Stormcrow Archers are adept in long-range combat, with recurved longbows and arrows made for distant flight. They're not meant for melee, though their shortswords can fend off weakened attackers. Still, a wise commander will keep them far from flankers or cavalry.

The infamous Stormcrow loyalty to coin extends even to their best-trained soldiers. Yet employers seeing Dervishes in action rarely have cause to complain as these heavy-hitters shred enemy flanks and fade away safely beyond any possible counterattack.

STORMCROW MERCENARIES

While one might question Stormcrow loyalty to their leaders, their employers, and even themselves, one can always count on their absolute devotion to coin. Once properly motivated, Stormcrow Mercenaries are capable medium infantry, adept at holding a flank or performing flanking maneuvers themselves. Their professionalism guarantees a good working relationship with whomever their employer might be, but only as long as the coin lasts.

As mountain tribes and raiders go, Tyrion Lannister's Stone Crows are quite ordinary, save their unexpected loyalty. While pledged more to Tyrion's coin than his person, they proved true to their word, even when betrayal might have been a more lucrative option. As mercenaries, these troops are worth their coin, if properly employed as scouts and flankers. Their light arms and armor make them unsuited to the front line in a protracted engagement.
