BARATHEON HALBERDIERS

Those facing House Baratheon have a conundrum. Their armor is thick, their forces resolute, and when accompanied by Halberdiers, even the inherent weakness of heavy infantry versus cavalry is nullified. Furthermore, any hesitation or failure to commit on the part of a cavalry unit (or other similar force) results in easily exploited confusion. Any competent Baratheon commander will find many uses for Halberdiers in their lines.

BARATHEON SENTINELS

Although officially classified as medium infantry, the Baratheon Sentinels wear heavier armor than one might expect for a unit required to initiate or counter flanking maneuvers. Speed is the obvious trade-off, but most medium infantry cannot hold their ground as well, nor deliver such devastating assaults. In unskilled hands the war hammer is unwieldy, but for Sentinels, a well-timed strike from its heavy head can render plate armor useless.

While House Baratheon may be divided in its loyalties, they still draw from the same battlefield doctrines and training that served the united house in the time before the War of the Five Kings. Baratheon Wardens are heavily armored in full plate, wielding heavy shields and the signature Baratheon war hammers. Steadfast and sturdy, Wardens can be depended on as both vanguard and center, though speed is not among their strengths.

CHAMPIONS OF THE STAG

8

In-keeping with the Baratheon doctrine of heavy arms and heavier armor, Champions of the Stag are knights in full plate mail atop massive destriers. These juggernauts have all the mobility of cavalry and the staying power of front-line units. Intelligent commanders are best served keeping them mobile to force engagements of their own choosing, but, if needed, Champions can hold the line for longer than most other cavalry.

DRAGONSTONE NOBLE

Dragonstone Nobles are easily marked by their signature antlered helmets, representing the House Baratheon sigil. Riding into battle on heavily armored mounts, and themselves encased in plate, Dragonstone Nobles are among the sturdiest individuals found on the battlefield. The more desperate the situation, the harder these fanatics battle. While they excel at locking down lighter troops, care must be taken to keep them from being encircled.

HIGHGARDEN PIKEMEN

Highgarden is House Tyrell's seat of power. Aiding House Baratheon's claim on the Iron Throne, House Tyrell sent their Highgarden Pikemen. These highly trained fighters create a mobile wall of death on the battlefield, trained to perfection in the use of their pikes. Though lightly armored, the perseverance of the troops is without equal, making them a mainstay on the battlefield. Opponents can never truly count them out until all have been defeated.

In the court of Stannis Baratheon, the King's Men remain faithful to the Seven, which is the majority religion in Westeros. While at-odds with the so-called Queen's Men who worship R'hllor, the two groups are not mutually hostile, though have adopted different training regimens. The King's Men focus on the greatsword and what mobility their heavy armor allows, also carrying with them an unwavering conviction to the One True King Stannis Baratheon.

King Renly Baratheon's Rainbow Guard are formed of the most formidable individuals to claim the youngest Baratheon as their liege and king. When taking the field together, they form the deadly core of Renly's force, capable of holding the line or flanking vulnerable units. Perhaps more importantly they serve as a symbol of the hope and faith which King Renly plans to use in uniting all of Westeros under his banner.

R'HLLOR LIGHTBRINGERS

In-keeping with the Baratheon doctrine of heavy armor, a R'hllor Lightbringer's kit includes a scale shirt and plate helm, making them more capable than most archery units of withstanding direct assault. The extra protection aids in wielding their most potent weapon: fire. Lightbringer arrows are dipped in oil and ignited seconds before firing. The oil is sticky, and while it burns out quickly, can easily set materials ablaze on impact.

The Queen's Men of Stannis Baratheon's court are so-named not specifically for their dedication to Queen Selyse, but for their conversion to the R'hllor faith (though some speculate that their true loyalty lies more towards the Red Priestess Melisandre). Queen's Men are heavily-armored elite vanguard units, capable of blunting nearly any enemy assault. While suffering the usual slowness of heavy troops, theirs is a center that will hold.

House Tyrell is steeped in chivalric traditions, and King Renly's alliance to them by way of Lady Margaery has earned the loyalty of the famed Riders of Highgarden. While not as heavily armored as most cavalry, the Riders can mount a charge as devastating as anything other factions can muster. A commander should guard against allowing them to be bogged down in a protracted melee, but even then, their loyalty and bravery shine through.

Thorn Watch crossbowmen are kitted out with mail shirts augmented with plate, longswords instead of the traditional daggers or short blades of most archers, and unique crossbows. Indeed, they undergo more training to battle enemies in melee than most archers ever see. That said, the crossbow is their primary weapon, itself capable of puncturing even heavy armor, and wise commanders will employ them appropriately.

CROWNLAND SCOUTS

6

No army serves its king by blundering blindly about the countryside. The more skilled their scouting forces, the better a commander can distribute their troops for an impending attack. The Crownland Scouts under the Baratheon Stag are among the finest in the Seven Kingdoms. Lightly armored to move at great speed, they are not suited for combat under most circumstances, but their reports can be relied upon for optimal deployments.
